

J2 TECHNICAL ARTICLE

Number 103

From Octagon Heaven

April 12, 1982

STEERING BOX & COLUMN - CHROME, BRASS & PAINT

It makes absolutely no sense at all but the British did some chrome plate work in an area where I would not have expected it. On a little car which was limited in chrome and polished brass they stuck in a piece of chrome.

In looking at the proto-type pictures and the "Instructional Manual" I would have concluded that the obvious chromed steering column case was not the way the production cars were built, yet this very afternoon when I finished removing several layers of old paint from the steering system, what do I find, but traces of chrome plating!

